

WATCH THESE THREE DEMOCRATS

James H. McInerney
The early voting in all precincts in the city election showed an evidence that the great majority of the citizens entitled to cast their ballots were aware that it was election day. The voting was the lightest in years, and the election officers expressed wonder as to why they had been so much surprised.

This was especially the case in Ward 11, where in Precinct 5 only four votes were cast from 6 to 7 o'clock. The saluting in other precincts of this ward was the same story all over the city, though the evidence here brought out a somewhat earlier vote in some precincts. The influence was not a new one, but a new one, and the voters were expected to vote for the same.

In Ward 20 the voters were expected to vote for the same, and the voters were expected to vote for the same. The voters were expected to vote for the same, and the voters were expected to vote for the same.

LANGFORD-JEANETTE BATTLE AT ARMORY

By "MACK."

Sam Langford and Joe Jeanette, no fighters for the title held by Jack Johnson, took tonight at the Armory A. In one of the biggest bouts ever staged here, the two men will be pitted against each other in a world championship challenge of the Boston case.

A record crowd will see the battle. The house for tickets is so great that it is likely the directors will have to refuse many late applications.

Langford is picked to win. Many wagers were made today at the downtown house but the Boston man would get the decision over his old rival. The consensus of opinion, however, is that the bout will be a full distance.

Chatter White, the veteran New York referee, will be the third man in the ring, the first sign of anything of color in the fight.

The directors will stand behind him and try to get the fight to last a full hour.

Sam Predicts Victory.

Joe Woolman's view is confident of victory. Langford knows that he can stand a terrific punch, one of the best in the world, and he is sure that he will win. The referee, Chatter White, is a man who has fought for many years and he is sure that he will win.

80 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, JANUARY 10, 1911

Speaker Walker says that there shall be no gerrymandering this year of the congressional districts by which the minority might have more Congressmen than the majority.

GOOD. Mr. Walker scores again.
But why not be CONSISTENT, Mr. Walker? You propose that the majority shall have its way with respect to the representation of Massachusetts in the lower branch of Congress.

Will you protect the right of a majority in its representation in the Senate or will you hide behind the cowardly cant that the Legislature must do its constitutional duty without regard to the will of the people?

It is the constitutional duty of the Legislature to elect a United States Senator this year. And it is also the constitutional duty of the Legislature to determine the boundaries of the congressional districts this year.

IF OBEYING THE WILL OF A MAJORITY OF THE PEOPLE IS RIGHT IN ONE CASE IT IS RIGHT ALSO IN THE OTHER.

Your first act of party independence, Mr. Walker, which made you a State leader, was your declaration for direct nominations.

Your second act was your declaration for a reduction of the tariff when the people of Massachusetts clearly indicated their desire for a reduction.

Your third and last act, Mr. Walker, is your recent declaration that the will of the majority of the State shall not be thwarted by any further gerrymandering of the congressional districts.

So far so good, Mr. Walker. But don't you know what is YOUR NEXT logical and inevitable step?

Ascertain the views of the people on the question of the next United States Senator, and heed their wishes.

You, Mr. Walker, should help to pass forthwith a bill which provides for ascertaining the choice of the people by a special election. If you wish REALLY to be fair and not just SEEM to be fair, you will take this step. You should not help to force upon Massachusetts for six long years a Senator who you know, or ought to know, is not approved by a majority of her citizens.

The Constitution of Arizona Gives the People This Right, and We Do Not Believe That President Taft Would Object to It

The new State of Arizona, which, it is to be hoped, will add a star to our flag in the course of this year, has prepared an extremely sensible and brief State Constitution.

Certain reactionaries (miscalled "Conservatives"), who fear to trust the people, object to the new Constitution of Arizona because it gives the people the power by their votes to take off the bench the judges whom these same votes put upon the bench.

It is predicted by those who do not believe in giving the people too much power that President Taft will refuse to ratify Arizona's Constitution with this provision in it.

We refuse to believe that Taft will in any way interfere in the matter. He believes in republican government. He knows that the honest judge, free from corporation influence, obeying and interpreting the law honorably, has nothing to fear from a constitutional provision which gives the people the right to get rid of an undesirable judge.

And he knows that that which a power can create, that same power should have the right to destroy.

If the citizens of Arizona are good and wise enough by their votes to put a judge on the bench, they are also good and wise enough to take that same judge off the bench if they find that his election was a mistake.

Naturally, if it were assumed—as too often happens in practice—that the judge is selected in advance by corporations to work for them, then the votes of the people in an election are a mere formality, and the vote would only be exercised in earnest in the recall—that would be all the more reason for allowing the people to have the recall.

Arizona is to be congratulated on a constitution which declares the highest authority resides in the people, that the voters can take away that which they give, and that because a man is selected as judge he does not cease to be one of the people, the servant of all the people and controlled by them.

SHAKESPEARE MEMORIAL

Editor AMERICAN:
April 23, 1916, is the three hundredth anniversary of William Shakespeare's death while traveling home in the subway, the inevitable happened, and it is only a miracle that I escaped a very serious injury to my right eye.

The coming generation loves its Shakespeare. At least six of the great cities of this country can erect a real Shakespeare

The ideal manner of its foundation would, of course, be by public subscrip-

THERE'S a dear wee funny old man to-day

THERE'S a dear, wee, funny old man to-day—
A marching about the old house,
And sometimes he'll make an awful noise
And sometimes he'll call a mouse;
He's wearing a coat that is far too big
And his hat seems a giant's size,
For it covers his ears and tiny nose,
Shutting out a view of his eyes.
His trousers are wrinkled and well turned up,
And his shoes—they are quite the thing—
Kept on in somewhat original style
By decking the uppers with string,
While the old-time vest—it perhaps might seem,
Had been built for a man a-plenty
For there's plenty of room for just three more
Like the dear, wee, funny old man.

If you stop to chat with the little man—
It's a strange thing you yet sit straight down,
He will surely ask you to sit straight down,
And tell him a story or two.
You will find his hair has a golden tinge,
And to prove all his teeth are second,
He will quickly dispose of a candy stick.
If you know where one's to be found.
He likes to hear all about "Mother Goose,"
And will ask you to explain—
How Jack got up to the giant's house
And how he got down safe again;
By the time you've told him about the stars
And when it was this world began—
A curious person, indeed, you'll find
Is this dear, was, funny old man.

It's almost an hour ago since I heard
That little old man and his call,
When he stood by the rail at the stair top,
Hailing puss below in the hall.
'Tis been pretty quiet up there since then,
Which means now—between you and me—
There is mischief abroad at the house-top
And I'd better get up and see.
I've looked into the rooms all about me,
And can't find a sign of the pair;
I've peeped in every nursery doorway—
One place told they had been there
Aha, here on a rug in the corner.
Both are curled right up in a heap.
And kitty purrs softly: "I'm wide awake,
But your funny old man's asleep."
